

Dr. Nodir Djanibekov joined the Leibniz Institute of Agricultural Development in Transition Economies (IAMO) in August 2012 as a researcher in the Department Agricultural Policy. He obtained his PhD at the Center for Development Research (ZEF), University of Bonn, Germany. Prior to joining IAMO, he was a researcher in the German-Uzbek development research project on the restructuring of land and water use in Uzbekistan. His main research interests include the issues of land-labor relations, evolution of (in)formal institutions in agriculture, collective action in resource use, agricultural organization, and rural transformation in the post-Soviet Central Asian countries.